It begins thirty-five years ago in a big city 36 a January morning with snow on the ground and a woman walking to the hospital to have her first baby. She is 37 her early twenties and the city is still strange to her, bigger and noisier than the easy streets and gentle hills of her distant home. She's walking because there is no money and everything of value has 38 to pay for the alcohol to which her husband has become addicted.

39 the way, a taxi driver notices her sitting, 40 and cold, in the doorway of a shop and he takes her to hospital for free. Later that day, she gives birth to a baby boy and, just as you are to me, he is the best thing she has ever seen. Her husband comes that night and weeps with joy when he sees his son. He is truly happy. Hungover, broke, but in his own way happy, for they were both young and in love with each other and their son.

It was 3:30 in the morning and 8-year-old Walt Disney was doing what he did at that time every morning – rolling hundreds of copies of the Kansas City Morning Times that he would soon place behind the screen door of subscribers along his route.

It was hard work for a little kid who also had to go to school, then deliver another round in the evening. Sometimes he had to trudge through three feet of snow. Other times he got so tired he'd sneak into an alley for a catnap. But the paper route beat picking apples for a living. That's what he'd been doing before, on his family's failing farm in Marceline, Missouri. The problem was that his boss – his stern father, Elias, - had the nasty habit of delivering daily beatings both to Walt and his brother Roy, eight years Walt's senior. After a disgusted Roy left home, the brunt of the work, and the beatings, fell on Elias' youngest son.

Walt Disney, born on December 5, 1901, never had time for a childhood. As a result, he spent all of his adult life attempting to invent one for himself. In the process – almost by accident – he created wonderful childhood memories for generation after generation of children worldwide.

“Sport probably does more to unify nations than any politician has ever been capable of.” So said Nelson Mandela. The only truly global occasions are the Olympics and the World Cup, watched by thousands of millions across the world. These great sporting events bring together players and athletes from different races like no other. Not only that, but sports provide just about the only example of global democracy where the rich do not dominate: On the contrary, Brazilians have long been supreme at soccer, the Kenyans at middle-distance running, and Americans at boxing.

However, there are signs of disquiet in this vast, global industry. The sheer volume of sports is reaching the bursting point for all but the most besotted fan. In soccer, the president of FIFA has suggested staging the World Cup every two years instead of four, and overpaid tennis players and golfers fly endlessly in personal jets from one meaningless tournament to the next. Sports are at risk of killing themselves through greed and overexposure. The danger is that we will all become satiated and ultimately disillusioned.

44. Which of the following is the main idea?

- A. Sports provide a good opportunity to build democratic nations.
- B. Sports can unite people but they also suffer from greed and overexposure.
- C. Sports can risk the danger of putting us into a state of being ultimately disillusioned.
- D. Sports are popular around the globe so that players and athletes from different races can compete in the same court.

45. Why would the president of FIFA suggest to shorten the interval of the World Cup to every two years?

- A. So that more businesses can take part in this big enterprise
- B. So that everyone can join the World Cup
- C. To ease the overheat of sports
- D. To satiate and disillusion the TV companies

46. What does the term “democracy” mean in this passage?

- A. All eligible citizens participate equally.
- B. A global industry that is vast and booming around the world.
- C. The World Cup that every two years would be held.
- D. Everyone can participate.

41. What is not mentioned in the article?

- A. Walt has a stern father.
- B. Roy escaped from home to avoid his brutal father.
- C. Walt moved to Los Angeles.
- D. Walt had to get up early.

42. What is the topic of this article?

- A. The stern father
- B. The good old memory
- C. The runaway brother
- D. The harsh childhood

43. What is Walt's former job?

- A. He picked apples.
- B. He delivered newspapers.
- C. He delivered daily beatings.
- D. He created wonderful childhood memories.

A US Airways jetliner with 155 people aboard lost power in both engines, possibly from striking birds, after taking off from La Guardia Airport on Thursday afternoon. The pilot ditched in the icy Hudson River and all on board were rescued by a flotilla of converging ferries and emergency boats, the authorities said.

What might have been a catastrophe in New York — one that evoked the feel if not the scale of the Sept. 11 attack — was averted by a pilot's quick thinking and deft maneuvers, and by the nearness of rescue boats, a combination that witnesses and officials called miraculous.

As stunned witnesses watched from high-rise buildings on both banks, the Airbus A320, which had risen to 3,200 feet over the Bronx and banked left, came downriver, its fuselage lower than many apartment terraces and windows, in a carefully executed touchdown shortly after 3:30 p.m. that sent up huge plumes of water at midstream, between West 48th Street in Manhattan and Weehawken, N.J.

On board, the pilot, Chesley B. Sullenberger III, 57, unable to get back to La Guardia, had made a command decision to avoid densely populated areas and try for the Hudson, and had warned the 150 passengers to brace for a hard landing. Most had their heads down as the jetliner slammed into the water, nose slightly up, just three minutes after takeoff on what was to be a flight to Charlotte, N.C.

Many on board and watching from the shores were shocked that the aircraft did not sink immediately. Instead, it floated, twisting and drifting south in strong currents, as three New York Waterway commuter ferries moved in. Moments later, terrified passengers began swarming out the emergency exits into brutally cold air and onto the submerged wings of the bobbing jetliner, which began taking in water.

As the first ferry nudged up alongside, witnesses said, some passengers were able to leap onto the decks. Others were helped aboard by ferry crews. Soon, a small armada of police boats, fireboats, tugboats and Coast Guard craft converged on the scene, and some of them snubbed up to keep the jetliner afloat. Helicopters brought wet-suited police divers, who dropped into the water to help with the rescues.

47. What's the attitude of journalist in reporting this news?
- A. He faithfully reports what happens.
 - B. He carefully adjusts his tone in order not to evoke the public.
 - C. He describes in detail how the passengers correspond to the emergency.
 - D. He reports this news with a sense of sentiment, comparing it to Sept. 11.
48. Why would the pilot decide to ditch in the Hudson river?
- A. He is afraid of losing power in both engines of the airplane.
 - B. He tries to avoid causing more casualties on the ground.
 - C. Because he does not want to evoke the feel of the Sept. 11 attack
 - D. Because he is an experienced pilot of glider without power
49. What would be the best title for this above article?
- A. Jetliner Plunges into Hudson
 - B. Jetliner Falls, Sept. 11 Again?
 - C. Pilot Hailed After Jetliner's Plunge
 - D. Massive Rescue from Shore Avoids Casualty
50. What happened after the airplane plunged into the water?
- A. Firefighters came immediately to rescue the survivors.
 - B. Many people on board watched from the shores and hailed the pilot.
 - C. Around 150 passengers witnessed the hard landing and came to pluck the airplane.
 - D. All kinds of boats rushed to the scene to help.

This is the end of the test. Good luck!
